- 12. Did you know... That June 2022 marks the 25th anniversary of the Franklin G. Burroughs-Simeon B. Chapin Art Museum? The modern-day Art Museum is the former Springmaid Villa, a large beach house that was moved a considerable distance to its current location on South Ocean Boulevard. The wood-framed structure began life as the house of a textile magnate in the cabana section of Myrtle Beach. Built in 1924 at 5429 North Ocean Boulevard, the original home of Eugene and Emma Cannon was next door to the Ocean Forest Hotel. The Cannons sold the house to Colonel Elliot Springs, a former World War I Ace Fighter Pilot, in the 1940s, and his family renamed it "Springmaid Villa." The Springs family and Springs Industries' executives enjoyed the home for several decades, until it changed hands again and was slated for demolition in 1975. Local artist Gaye Fisher, then president of the Waccamaw Arts and Crafts Guild, was determined to resurrect the villa as an art museum and began a campaign to "save Springmaid Villa." However, re-using the building required relocation. To move the 150-ton structure, Waccamaw Arts and Crafts Guild member and Myrtle Beach City Councilman Harry Charles and wife Jane organized the three-day relocation using two flatbed trucks. In the spring of 1984, a team of Myrtle Beach city employees, utility workers and Waccamaw Arts and Crafts Guild members worked side-by-side to make the eight-mile journey south to its new home, an undeveloped property donated by the Myrtle Beach Farms Company. Fundraising commenced for the newly formed Springmaid Villa Art Museum Corporation, a non-profit organization charged with converting the property into a public art museum. In June 1997, the 10,000 square foot art museum opened to the public and has been a Myrtle Beach gem for 25 years. The museum was renamed as the Franklin G. Burroughs-Simeon B. Chapin Art Museum to honor the land donors and Myrtle Beach Farms' co-founders. In 2001, the City of Myrtle Beach purchased the museum building and now maintains the exterior and grounds, making the museum more financially stable. In June 2003, the museum began offering free admission for residents and visitors alike. To view photos of the move, see our Myrtle Beach Point of View blog.
