These brands are only online suggestions. Do your homework on which to choose from. Keep in mind that most AEDs, for lay-person use, do the same thing. Also keep in mind for refurbished AEDs, there is nothing that says you cannot use them, it is strictly your choice, just make sure you get a warranty with it. Some places will "bundle" other items with your AED like a cabinet, sign or other first aid items, that is also your choice, just be aware of what you are getting for your price.

AEDs and what's the difference?

Here is what AEDs look like:

These two AEDs do virtually the same thing. Both devices will actually have voice commands, however, the only difference is the one on the right has a screen to help the rescuer place the pads correctly and also show them how to properly perform CPR as well as other instructions. It is up to you on what you want to spend and how easy you want to make it for the rescuer.

If you call any distributor, they will have trained staff on hand to help you choose the correct AED for you.
